

The project "VLK" is my first long time project designed to test an idea, or a personal thought over Documentary Photography, or over the idea of objective and neutral documentary. Having some roots in the Conceptual Documentary photography practice, this project focuses on the social everyday life from Vulcan. My personal approach over the city is based on tree parts, tree social spaces (as i sad) where I believe that, very objectively, i can document the essence of human actions, or presence by capturing signs and symbols made by citizens, conceptual reduced at the meaning of "gesture". The legend says that in one particular night from 1788, the Austrian General Landau was one of the last stand of defence in the region, fighting against a very large army of Ottoman Turks. In that night, General Landau gave the order to put out the camp fire because the Ottomans started to see, through the darkness of night, their positions. Some soldier could not put out the camp fire they made, as the piles of coal underneath had caught in fire.
